Department of Zoology celebrated World Sparrow Day

Bhiwani 20 March. The Department of Zoology, Chaudhary Bansi Lal University organized a festival to commemorate World Sparrow Day while promoting bird biodiversity. The Department of Zoology organized a series of engaging and educational activities to raise awareness about the challenges faced by sparrows and inspire action towards their conservation. Registrar Dr. Reetu Singh praised the department for organizing this event and said that the initiatives taken by the Department of Zoology, which include installation of bird wood board nests, bird feeders and water containers in our campus, exemplify the proactive approach of our University towards environmental conservation. By creating favorable habitats for sparrows and other bird inhabitants, we are not only nurturing biodiversity but also fostering a deeper connection between our community and the natural world. The program was inaugurated by Dr. Asha Poonia, Coordinator of the Department. who clearly explained the importance of World Sparrow Day and underlined the strong commitment of the department for sparrow conservation. On this occasion, Registrar Dr. Reetu Singh and renowned expert in the field of wildlife conservation, Professor Parmesh Kumar were present as special guests on the occasion as well District Wildlife Officer Virendra Godara. Their presence lent gravitas to the proceedings and their practical contributions enriched the discussion on sparrow conservation strategies and best practices. At the center of the event, initiatives aimed at enhancing the sparrow habitat within the university campus were unveiled. These initiatives include the installation of bird wood board nests, strategically placed bird feeders and water containers, designed to provide essential resources and safe shelter for sparrows amid the urban landscape. Such efforts underline the proactive approach of the Department to promote biodiversity conservation at the grassroots level. Throughout the event, participants were actively engaged in workshops, discussions and awareness-raising activities focused on sparrow conservation. The evident enthusiasm and commitment displayed by the faculty members, students and volunteers underlined the collective resolve to protect and conserve these cherished bird species. Media representatives were also present to document the event and spread the message of wildlife conservation to a wider audience. Their coverage will undoubtedly inspire others to join the cause and contribute to sparrow conservation efforts. In conclusion, the Department of Zoology reiterates its unwavering dedication to the conservation and promotion of biodiversity of the sparrow. Through collaborative efforts, community engagement and advocacy, we strive to create a world where sparrows and other bird species thrive in harmony with nature.
